Margarette “Mo” Richard

To enjoy indulgent, lactose-free ice cream that satisfies her cravings without sacrificing comfort, tradition, or taste.

Age: 69

Location: Dingle, Ireland
Status: Widowed

Living Situation: Lives alone with her cat, Pickles

Personality: Grumpy charm, fiercely Independent, soft-centered

Dietary Needs: Lactose Intolerant

Guilty Pleasure: Ice cream—though it no longer loves her back

Brands She Likes

- Murphy's Ice Cream (used to be her favourite—hopes it could be again)
- Barry's Tea (loyal customer for decades)
- Butlers Chocolate (for Christmas or gifting)
- Odlums (she still bakes when the mood strikes)

Psychographic Profile

- Values: Simplicity, honesty, consistency, comfort, community
- Beliefs: Food should be real, indulgence should be allowed, age shouldn't exclude anyone
- Emotional Triggers: Nostalgia, loss, being seen, being respected
- Frustrations: Being ignored by brands, artificial alternatives, overreliance on tech

- Grumpy charm
- Fiercely independent
- Resistant to change unless convinced
- Warm-hearted (though she doesn't admit it easily)
- Observant and witty

Goals

- Reclaim small joys once shared with her late husband
- Enjoy comfort food that fits her dietary needs
- Feel seen and included in a world shifting to "youth and trends"

Frustrations

- Dairy-free options lack creaminess and warmth
- Feels excluded from family treat moments
- Overlooked by trend-based marketing and staff who don't understand her needs
- Digital alienation — new to modern platforms

Bio

Margarette Richard - though you'd better call her Mo unless you want a look. She has spent her whole life in Dingle. She's a salt-of-the-earth Irishwoman with a grumble for every occasion and a heart bigger than she lets on. Life slowed down after her husband passed, but she keeps her routines tight: breakfast with the radio, afternoon walks, TV marathons of Father Ted, and cuddles with Pickles, her diva of a tabby cat.

Mo once had a deep love affair with ice cream, especially the kind she and her husband shared on quiet strolls by the water. But lactose intolerance now keeps her from indulging. "It's a betrayal," she says. "To love something that doesn't love you back." Most dairy-free options either taste like frozen air or are "full of ingredients she can't pronounce." Still, the craving never left, just the options did!

She doesn't want pity or preachy "wellness" talk. She wants something real. Something creamy. Something that reminds her she's still allowed a little luxury.

Loyalty

- Once loyal, always loyal—Mo will return and recommend if she's treated right
- Values consistency and old-fashioned customer service
- More likely to become a brand advocate in her community than online

What She Wants from Murphy's Ice Cream

- Real dairy-free ice cream that doesn't feel like a compromise
- Comforting, nostalgic flavors (like rhubarb crumble or honeycomb)
- A creamy mouthfeel, not icy, not watered down, and certainly not a smoothie
- A sense of belonging in the brand, without the digital noise
- In-store warmth: a smile, a sample, a conversation, not filters or hashtags

Behavior Traits

- Loyal to local businesses that treat her well
- Doesn't mind paying more for quality if it feels worth it
- Often browses local shops, talks to staff, asks for "the real stuff"
- Skeptical at first but fiercely loyal once she's convinced

Education & Background

- Completed secondary school
- Practical and intuitive thinker; values real-world experience
- Lifelong Dingle resident with strong community ties

Preferred Channels

Hobbies & Interests

- Watching Irish comedies and reruns of old shows
- Talking to Pickles (and pretending she doesn't)
- Walking down to the harbour
- Listening to the radio with a cup of tea

Story Board

Scene 1

An elderly Irish lady in a wool cardigan sits stiffly on an armchair in her dimly lit living room, with a flickering fireplace in the background.

Scene 2

In the same cozy living room, a grey cat perches on the armrest, mirroring the lady's frown.

Scene 3

The lady, accompanied by her cat in a small carrier, strolls along a cobbled Irish street lined with old stone houses.

Scene 4

Arriving in front of Murphy's Ice Cream Shop, colourful signage and cheerful patrons inside create an inviting atmosphere.

Scene 5

Inside the shop, the lady frowns while scrutinising the menu, her thoughts hinting at lactose concerns.

Scene 6

A chalkboard near the entrance displays 'Dairy-Free Ice Creams – Just as Creamy!' with a bright arrow drawing attention.

Story Board

Scene 7

The lady takes a spoonful of ice cream inside the shop, her eyes widening in pleasant astonishment.

Scene 8

A sepia-toned flashback shows a young woman sharing ice cream and laughter with her late husband on a park bench.

Scene 9

Back in the shop, the lady smiles warmly as her purring cat rubs affectionately against her leg.

Scene 10

A lively montage showcases diverse people – children, elderly, and various ethnic groups – happily enjoying Murphy's Ice Cream outdoors.
